Buckwheat Boom

In simpler times our forebears often celebrated the completion of a cold morning's chores with a steaming stack of buckwheat griddle cakes accompanied by generous servings of ham, eggs, bacon or sausage. By 1900, however, the production of buckwheat began a long and drastic decline, victim of changes in industrial man's breakfast habits and in the economic realities of agriculture.

Today buckwheat is enjoying a return of popularity, which is requiring millers to contract with growers to meet the demands. Ironically part of this renewed interest is attributed to people seeking the more relaxed life style of the "old days," including the revival of some of yesterday's foods. The demand has also been heightened by the success of a commercially prepared breakfast cereal and by exports to Japan for making buckwheat noodles. Perhaps the boom rests mainly on the nutritional excellance of breakfast. Agricultural Research Service analysis indicate the plant has an amino acid composition nutritionally superior to all cereals, including oats. Buckwheat protein is particularly rich (6 percent) in the limiting amino acid lysine.

There are production problems with buckwheat: it has indeterminate growth, the plant puts forth vegetative and flowering growth until frost, thereby reducing seed set and yield. Buckwheat does not respond well to fertilization because of hollow stems which lead to lodging and yield losses.

A significant advance has been made through the development of Pennquad, the first tetraploid buckwheat in North America. Pennquad has large seeds of uniform size and thick stems that resist lodging.

The above picture is from the farm of Lawrence Stewart, Evergreen, who is growing one acre of buckwheat. J. A. Smith, Extension Agent, reports that this is the only planting of buckwheat in Appomattox County.

S.C.A. High School Report

The S.C.A. Officers met Friday, September 13th, at the high school. During this time we discussed the elections for sophomore, Freshman Class Officers. Also we went over the problem of electing representatives and the installation of S.C.A. officers.

It was decided that Carla Lipford (the S.C.A. Treasurer) would make out a form concerning sophomore, Freshman officers and she will hand out to each homeroom teacher for the students to sign their names and the office which they desire. After this a preliminary and finally a primary election.

Then the matter was called to hand about electing S.C.A. Representatives. The conclusion was that the president of each club would elect a temporary representative and as soon as the club has formed a permanent representative will be put in action.
